Telepathy

Telepathy is direct transference of thought from one person (sender or agent) to another (receiver or percipient) without using the usual sensory channels of communication, hence a form of extrasensory perception (ESP). While the existence of telepathy has not yet been proved, some parapsychological research studies have produced favourable results using such techniques as card guessing with a special deck of five sets of five cards. The agent may simply think of a random order of the five card symbols while the percipient tries to think of the order on which the agent is concentrating. In a general ESP test the sender concentrates on the face of one card at a time while the receiver tries to think of the symbol. Both subjects are, of course, separated by a screen or some greater obstacle or distance. Scores significantly above chance are extremely rare, particularly as testing methods have become more rigorous.

Precognition is supernormal knowledge of future events, with emphasis not upon mentally causing events to occur but upon predicting those the occurrence of which the subject claims has already been determined. Like telepathy and clairvoyance, precognition is said to operate without recourse to the normal senses and thus to be a form of extrasensory perception (esp).

There is a long tradition of anecdotal evidence for foreseeing the future in dreams and by various devices such as observing the flight of birds or examining the entrails of sacrificial animals. Precognition has been tested with subjects required to predict the future order of cards in a deck about to be shuffled or to foretell results of dice throws, but the statistical support for it has generally been less convincing than that from experiments in telepathy and clairvoyance.

Telepathy is instinctual. Primitive species used it as a survival mechanism. It involves mind to mind contact - communication - of one mind with another by means beyond the normal or ordinary - beyond the frequencies of the five physical senses - sight, hearing, touch, taste, smell.

It is the 'instinct' in humanity that creates the ability that we call telepathy, clairvoyance, psychic abilities, etc.

We have forgotten how to rely on our basic instincts, which is intuition, because of our reliance on ego-consciousness.

When I do a psychic reading on someone I am communicating telepathically with the client's soul

their thoughts

Telepathy

their spirit guides - deceased loved ones

another aspect of their soul - existing elsewhere

their timelines

The messages are given in symbols - through thought (clairaudience) or visually (clairaudience)

Age groups:

Babies / Very young children:

They telepath all the time: "Hungry, Sleepy, Wet, Happy, Bored" -- Babies have not as yet developed 'ego-consciousness' so they rely more on instinct.

Teens:

Teenagers at puberty (generally ages 12-16) show a heightened awareness of telepathy and telekinetic skills.

Adults:

Greater use of the mind--occurs more from ages 35-->on. Instincts kick in when something is going on and your intuitive sense tells you that it is so.

Here is an example from a female client:

She had been married for 4 years and accepted the fact that her husband was out of town on business from time to time and kept late hours after work on occasion. One day she felt something was wrong although from all 'outside' appearances her husband had not changed his general routine. Not knowing what to do about it-- she consulted with friends. Eventually she hired a private detective who provided her with the proof that he was having an extra-marital affair.

The bottom line to this is that her unconscious ability to see things not obvious at the moment had kicked in. When she needed to telepath - she could. It was a survival instinct. The inner mind 'kicked in'!

The 90% of the brain that we do not use is connected directly to the unconscious mind. The realm of the visible, of images, known contents, feelings, thoughts, and desires--what we call the 'realm of consciousness' - makes up only a small fraction of the total psyche.

In fact, the conscious part of the psyche is like a tiny volcanic island heaved up from the ocean bottom and surrounded by a vast expanse of water, which, like the unconscious, is extraordinarily rich in different life forms.

Telepathy

Consciousness plays a critical role because the unconscious is often reacting to it. The bottom line: It is always the 'unconscious' that displays a profound wisdom in directing our evolution.

Telepathy often involves people connecting into the same frequency therefore sending and receiving messages

Telepathy can be perceptive or projective. Some people are better receivers while others are better senders. If you know who is calling you before the phone rings--then you are a good receiver. The caller thinks of you and you connect vibrationally. It is also fun to send a mental message to someone to contact you and see if they do.

Telepathy and Dreams

Dreams also bring telepathic messages. If they are about the future - they are called precognitive dreams.

Some dreams are the way a deceased loved one will communicate with you as they may not have a physical body anymore - but they still exist in a higher frequency level where the entities have no physical form. In those frequency there is no physical form - therefore no physical speech patterns. It is all done by telepathy. When you dream - you no longer have the burdens of a physical body. You communicate by telepathy. You meet up with spirit in dreamtime and share adventures. Try to remember what was said - or messages given to you - as soon as you wake up - your conscious returns to your third dimensional body.

The most common published accounts of telepathy and ESP are between lovers or family members, and focus on a life-threatening injury or death. These people know how to tune into each other's frequencies as they spend time together.

There is usually a strong desire to communicate between two distant (separated) individuals.

A mother senses her child is in danger. An individual senses the death of a family member. These make the most dramatic stories - heightened tension, nick-of-time rescues. However, keep in mind that telepathic situations may be happening all the time, but we lack the awareness to recognize them. In times of crisis we send out our message and those who are in tune will pick it up.

From Todd Laurence:

Telepathy

One of the most successful, series of free-response telepathy studies was conducted in the 1960's and 1970's by Montague Ullman at Maimonides Medical Center in Brooklyn, New York.

Their results suggested that if someone is asked to send 'mental images' to a dreaming person, the dreamer will sometimes incorporate those images into the dream.

As far as pre-cognitive dreams, the most startling example is as follows:

"An individual by the name of Victor Samson, was a news editor for the Boston Globe. One Friday evening he and some of his cronies from the newspaper went to the local 'watering hole' for a nightcap. He had become inebriated over the course of the next few hours and instead of going home, went back to the office to sleep-it-off. Upon awakening he recalled a 'nightmare dream', in which he had an OBE (out-of-body-experience). He found himself floating over an island called Pele. This island had an active volcano which erupted as he observed it. It rained down molten lava on the villages below and many thousands of people were killed."

Samson awoke at that point and grabbed a work sheet used in reporting stories and recorded every detail of this dream. Too shaken to remain at the office, he went home to sleep. Early the next morning the publisher of the newspaper passed by Samson's desk and started to read the story. Unfortunately Mr. Samson did not indicate that this was a dream experience and the publisher printed it. It also went out on all of the wire services across the country.

The bottom line to this story is that the event was true but, the actual explosion occurred on the island of Krakatau in the area of Indonesia between Java and Sumatra. The original name of the island was Pele given by the local natives.

What makes this story so unique, is the fact that this event occurred in August of 1883. There were no cables to communicate the explosion of the volcano and it was only after many weeks that the clipper ships brought the news that more than 36,000 people had died on that island. Mr. Samson had had the dream within the same hour that the event occurred.

Telepathy

There is a high rate of telepathic communication in families - often in specific families as the DNA for activation is inherited - sometimes through the female line.

Remember that souls in families travel together through many incarnations and are familiar with each other multidimensionally.

When telepathing one is tuning into the frequency of another person and reading the frequency of their thoughts.

In biological families - where there is a genetic link - certain family members may function on the same vibrational frequency - therefore allow them to tune into each other's thoughts.

Mothers figure seem the most intuitive with telepathy as feminine energy is the intuitive side (right side) of the brain.

Telepathy is not an ongoing event - which is probably best for mother and child - as children do get into mischief.

How well the mother of young children knows when their toddler is in trouble.

Twins are even more telepathic - often relying on intuitive senses rather than verbal language. Identical twins seem to have the greatest amount of telepathic communication than other members of a family.

Many of the children being born now have activated DNA and seek to learn about telepathy as that is inherent to them for them - just needing to be activated.

In many cases these children are natural telepaths. One has to understand that we 'ride in' on certain frequencies - such as the year, time, and place, we are born. The planet is now moving into higher and higher frequencies therefore the souls coming in - are 'riding in' on higher wave frequencies.

Could you imagine reading all of your child's thoughts? or better yet, if they could read all of yours?? (Oh dear).

I don't think we could function in the emotional playground of 3D if could 'read' each other all the time.

When you are a psychic - you open the intuitive side of your brain and the chakras needed to 'see' and 'hear'.

The rest of the time you 'turn it off' or else you would not be able to function.

Telepathy

Imagine the clutter of noise in your mind if all of the frequencies came into you at once. (I think that did a 'Voyager' story using that theme wherein three former members of 'Seven of Nine's Borg collective' are faced with that problem. They just want to 'shut off' the noise. In a sense her group of nine members were a family).

In the case of 'emergency situations' a family member - who is tuned into another family member will pick up the fact that something is wrong.

When we are in 'trouble' we revert back to our natural survival instincts - in which we can all telepath.

We go into that place of 'instinct' and we listen with our 'higher sense' as primitive man did.

In families - there are often members who are more sensitive and will be 'read' other members.

I have friends who play telepathy games with their children - wherein one member will think of something and the second person has to guess what he is thinking about.

The rate of success for this type of telepathy is often higher than with those outside of the family - as a rule.

Family members who are learning challenged - often rely on 'higher senses' to connect with those around them.

When you are talking about 'psychic sensitives' - they train themselves - or are naturally gifted to send and receive messages. This innate gift is based on their DNA opening at an early age.

Pets living with a family also show a high degree of psychic awareness with certain family members - not necessarily the person who brought the pet home - but the person the pet has the karma with - which is why the pet came into the family in the first place.
